Newburgh Academy.

000

The older records of Newburgh Academy perished 7th September, 1887, in the fire which destroyed the better part of the village. But from the recollections of elderly men the following facts have been ascertained :

1839 The Academy was established either in the latter part of 1841, or early in 1842. Work of excellent quality and enduring merit was done within its walls during the first thirty years after its establishment. Young men and women from the various sections of the old Bay of Quinte district were considered scarcely qualified to begin the active life of the world until they had attended for a few terms at Newburgh Academy. During the years 1867-'71 John Campbell, M.A., being headmaster, a score or so of young men from the distant Bahama Isles came, upon the recommendation of Rev. Dr. Ryerson, to Newburgh Academy to get a liberal education.

The school has always been improving in the quality of its work ; but wealthier communities have established and equipped schools which have recently outstripped the old Academy, so that its relative rank appears to have been becoming lower at the same time that, compared with its former self, the efficiency of the school year after year has steadily enhanced, albeit sometimes slowly.

After the total destruction of the business portion of the village (September, 1887), the continued existence of the High School was for a while doubtful. But several who seemed to feel that they owed it much, paid back to the venerable institution in the hour of its need, financial and other aid as a partial return for benefits of a value not to be measured in money. An excellent library was donated ; and by united effort the School was tided over, until the High Schools Act of 1891 coming into force, relieved the local municipality of a large proportion of the burden of maintenance, which for half a century the small incorporated village had borne alone, but which was fast becoming too heavy in these modern calamitous days.
